"I want to feel like we are our own entity, existing in a private universe that nothing and no one else can pierce. That life is all about looking at her, in her, nothing more, nothing less. Without makeup, she is the perfect combination of girl and woman, and she fills me with a need to hold and protect her that leaves me raw and open and more vulnerable than any person should ever be." That's our special guest Rachel Kramer Bussel in her short story, "The End." It was selected for The Best

You Did Not Choose Me, I Chose You First

You Did Not Choose Me, I Chose You First Jan 30th, 2008 by Brenda "You did not choose me, but I chose you and appointed you to go and bear fruit that will last. Then the Father will give you whatever you ask in my name (John 15:16 NIV). Word of the Day You must believe and you must know that I never abandon My friends. Remember, you did not choose Me but I chose you and what a pleasure it was and still is (John 15:16). I still remember the day with such fondness. What a wonder
